Increasingly, sex and gender categories are rendered as natural, innate, and under the purview of science and medicine. Over the summer session, we will use a social scientific approach to explore the historical contexts that shape the science of sex and gender, trouble the science, and grapple with how scientific communities reproduce and perpetuate multiple forms of oppression within sex and gender.

Course Prerequisite: Completion of Tier I Writing Requirement (e.g. LB 133)
Fulfills ISS Requirement

Find out more on the LBC website: